CALL FOR PROPOSALS

PROGRAM CHAIR: Emmanuel Jean-Francois, Ohio University

ABOUT THE SUMMIT

The African Educational Research Network \(AERN\) proudly invites you to submit proposals for panels, workshop, roundtable discussions, virtual presentation, and poster presentation that examine current issues, scholarship, and debates in all areas related to Africa and the African diaspora. Professional/scholars, students, practitioners, and retired individuals from any discipline. Topics may include, but are not limited to:

Education and Development in Africa

Research and Scholarship on Africa

Africa and the African Diaspora

Reflective Practices on Africa

Culture, Language, and Literacy in Africa

STEM, STEM education, and Development in Africa

Politics, Public Policy, and Development in Africa

Justice, Democracy, Human Rights, and Development in Africa

Environment, Sustainability, and Development in Africa

SESSION TYPES

1. Concurrent Panel: A concurrent panel features a maximum of three individual oral presentations, grouped under a particular conference topic. Each presentation is limited to 15-20 minutes, and an additional 5-10 minutes for question and answer (Q&A) or group discussion. Presenters are encouraged to include visual aids such as paper handouts, computer slides, or digital displays that might enhance their oral presentation. Concurrent panels may last up to 90 minutes.

A presentation in a concurrent panel can be a:

- 1.1. Research paper: Presentation of findings from an empirical research study. An empirical study should clearly include a problem statement or justification, stated research questions, theoretical or conceptual framework, population and sample, data collection procedures, analytic approach, findings, conclusion, and references.
 - 1.2. Scholarly paper: A research presentation from secondary data analysis, literature review, or conceptual framework. A scholarly paper should include an introduction, a thesis or a purpose statement, theoretical or conceptual framework, data sources and analytical procedures, key findings or arguments, conclusion, and references.
 - 1.3. Research in progress: Presentation based on an ongoing research project or study. A research in progress presentation should at least include a problem statement or justification, stated research questions, and any additional information related to the current and future states of the study.
 - 1.4. Reflective practice: Presentation based on a reflective practice by a scholar, a scholar-practitioner, or a practitioner. A reflective practice paper should include an introduction, a thesis or a purpose statement, a context, a framework guiding the reflection, key reflective assertions or considerations, or arguments, conclusion, and references.
2. Workshop: A workshop is intended for teaching to participants a new skill, techniques or proficiencies on a particular topic or subject. A workshop should include practical applications, and should take advantage of participatory teaching strategies. A workshop may last up to 90 minutes.
 3. Roundtable: A roundtable is envisioned to allow time and space for an informed discussion and/or debate under a topic or an issue. A roundtable should include at least three presenters, including a selected chair facilitating the discussions. A roundtable may last up to 60 minutes.
 4. Virtual Presentation: A virtual presentation is for an individual who is unable to attend the conference in person to present using an online platform. A virtual presentation may part of a concurrent panel, a roundtable, or as a stand-alone session. One-day summit registration is required.
 5. Poster Presentation: A poster presentation highlights preliminary results of work-in-progress by way of visual display. It could also highlight projects that lend themselves to visual displays and representations. Although displays typically include posters (maximum 4' x 6'), other forms of display such as digital/computer-based, and artwork are welcome. Each display should feature a concise description of the purpose and procedures of the work. Presenters are encouraged to share handouts that might clarify or expand on the contents of the poster. Presenters are solely responsible for organizing their display materials, and doing so in accordance with the space designations of the conference. The session featuring poster presentations is 60 minutes in length.

PROPOSAL REQUIREMENTS
